A MESSAGE FROM FR. STEVE

Happy Fathers' Day!

Today, we celebrate our fathers. As pastor, I want to express my appreciation for fathers who model for their children (and all of us) the love of the Heavenly Father. Our culture has eroded the respect that fathers deserve, and I pray that Christian fathers will prayerfully look to our Father in heaven for the grace to live as witnesses of God's love in their homes and in the world. I pray that mothers and children will honor fathers and respect them as they strive to be the fathers God longs for them to be. May God bless all fathers, whether biological or spiritual.

Vacation Bible School

Please pray for the children, families, and volunteers who will be part of Vacation Bible School this week. Thanks to Angie Am-burn and her team for all their preparation and work to make this possible. We literally couldn't do this without you!

Lost Connections

Last weekend, in my Pentecost homily, I talked about the importance of being connected, as it were, to the Lord, "in whom we live, and move, and have our being." In other words, we should abide in Him, and He in us. The life of the Trinity is love, which is ultimately the only way we can be healed, made whole, and attain true joy and peace. I mentioned a secular book by Johann Hari that describes seven "lost connections" that lead to depression. In his concluding chapter, Hari reflects on what he would tell his teenage self, if he could, based on what he learned by writing his book. In this extended excerpt, he makes clear the power and importance of the ways we live, and the effects of brokenness in our lives and world. This secular work is a great "pitch" for the healing ministry at our parish, which is guided by a desire to reestablish the most fundamental connection—with the love of God—and with other fundamental ways we are called to live as God's special creation. Let's pray for each other, that we will all live wisely and well in keeping with the way God made us to live. And, thereby, not just survive, but thrive.

You aren't a machine with broken parts. You are an animal whose needs are not being met. You need to have a community. You need to have meaningful values, not the junk values you've been pumped full of all your life, telling you happiness comes through money and buying objects. You need to have meaningful work. You need the natural world. You need to feel you are respected. You need a secure future. You need connections to all these things. You need to release any shame you might feel for having been mistreated. Every human being has these needs, and in our culture, we're relatively good at meeting physical needs—almost nobody actually starves, for example, which is an extraordinary achievement. But we've become quite bad at meeting these psychological needs. That's a crucial reason why you—and so many of the people around you—are depressed and anxious.

You are not suffering from a chemical imbalance in your brain. You are suffering from a social and spiritual imbalance in how we live. Much more than you've been told up to now, it's not serotonin; it's society. It's not your brain; it's your pain. Your biology can make your distress worse, for sure. But it's not the cause. It's not the driver. It's not the place to look for the main explanation, or the main solution.

Because you have been given the wrong explanation for why your depression and anxiety are happening, you are seeking the wrong solution. Because you are being told depression and anxiety are misfirings of brain chemicals, you will stop looking for answers in your life and your psyche and your environment and how you might change them. You will become sealed off in a serotonin story. You will try to get rid of the depressed feelings in your head. But that won't work unless you get rid of the causes of the depressed feelings in your life.

No, I would say to my younger self—your distress is not a malfunction. It is a signal—a necessary signal.

I know this is going to be hard to hear, I'd tell him, because I know how deep your suffering cuts. But this pain isn't your enemy, however much it hurts. . . . It's your ally—leading you away from a wasted life and pointing the way toward a more fulfilling one.

Then I would tell him—you are at a fork in the road now. You can try to muffle the signal. That will lead you to many wasted years when the pain will persist. Or you can listen to the signal and let it guide you—away from the things that are hurting and draining you, and toward the things that will meet your true needs. . . .

So instead of seeing your depression and anxiety as a form of madness, I would tell my younger self—you need to see the sanity in this sadness. You need to see that it makes sense. Of course it is excruciating. I will always dread that pain returning, every day of my life. But that doesn't mean the pain is insane, or irrational. If you touch your hand to a burning stove, that, too, will be agony, and you will snatch your hand away as quickly as possible. That's a sane response. If you kept your hand on the stove, it would burn and burn until it was destroyed.

Depression and anxiety might, in one way, be the sanest reaction you have. It's a signal, saying—you shouldn't have to live this way, and if you aren't helped to find a better path, you will be missing out on so much that is best about being human.
